New Jersey's Senatorial Siege Without Change.

Further Testimony in the Texas Outrage Investigation.

Russia's Position in the Coming Contest Indicated.

The New Jersey Deadlock.

TRENTON, February 18.—A ballot for United States senator was taken to-day, with the following result: Sewell 35, Abbett 35, Hetle 3, scattering 8. The only change from previous ballots was that Speaker Baird dropped Judge Morgan and voted for Hetle. The joint assembly then stood. The ballot showed no tendency towards a deadlock, and both sides are beginning to realize that they are in for a long siege. Governor Abbett has declared himself ready to withdraw whenever it appears that any other man can command democratic votes, but he does not decide to sacrifice his chances to a mere experiment. Senator Sewell is said to be similarly disposed on the republican side.

The Texas Investigation.

WASHINGTON, February 19.—In the Texas investigation to-day, Rives (white), brother of one of the mountaineers, was sworn and examined. He is a justice of the peace of Brenham and a republican. The feeling toward republicans following the election in November was very bitter. Witness was several times advised by democratic friends not to stay at his home, and in consequence he left for a time with his family. On one occasion he was informed that a crowd had assembled threatening to go and shoot into witness' house. This was the day his brother the mountaineer left Brenham.

Witness was asked to describe the circumstances of his brother's leaving. He said he had heard a great many threats towards his brother. His brother told him he had sold his property, and half an hour later a democratic friend came into witness' office and pointed to a crowd of 40 or 50 men on the street and said they insisted upon his brother's leaving that night. Witness got his mother to persuade his brother to leave that night. Witness however called upon a prominent democratic friend to ask if his brother could remain until next day, fearing that his house would be burned down before he could get the pay for it. This friend said Judge Kirk assured him he could control the crowd, but the friend finally concluded that the brother had better leave that night, and to facilitate the departure this friend drew his check for $100. Witness and two or three friends escorted the brother to the depot at 7 o'clock that evening. There was a crowd of several hundred men at the depot, but they did nothing except to raise a yell as the train pulled out. Witness held an inquest over the bodies of the three lynched negroes. The inquest continued all day, and they adjourned over two days to get more evidence. During this interval two of the jurors asked witness to call the jury together and have the thing finished, as they had been warned not to ask too many questions. They were afraid on cross-examination. Witness said he received two written notices to leave and several verbal warnings by friends to look out.

Q.—"Well hadn't there been a great many republican officeholders in Washington county before?"

A.—"Yes, sir."

Q.—"Now, inasmuch as republican officeholders had been in office there without any threat or molestation before, how do you account for the way that threats were made this time?"

"I account for it in this way, that the republican ticket was elected this time and the democrats didn't want to give up the offices, and by that plan they could scare off the republicans from converting."

Witness further explained that until two years ago the republicans had had the office, but two years ago, owing to a republican split, the democrats were victorious. The republicans had surrendered the offices and it was, as witness thought, to retain the hold the democrats thus acquired that they created the excitement of last November. Witness for a time sent his family to the houses of neighbors to spend the nights, while witness himself sometimes spent the night in the woods and others stayed at home surrounded by a guard of friends.

Senator Eustis named several republican office holders who did not reside in Washington county; and witness said in reply to inquiries that he thought they had received notices to leave. They had not been disturbed in the discharge of their duties.

Russia's Position.

ST PETERSBURG, February 19.—It is semi-officially stated that in Russian government circles the conviction is gaining ground that war between France and Germany is inevitable. In addition it is said the fresh defeat of France might involve disastrous results to Russia. The czar's government will, in event of war, preserve entire liberty of action. It will not support France as an ally, but may from a reserved attitude prevent Germany from sending the whole of her army west of the Rhine, and even if France should be defeated diminish as much as pos ble the effects of the disaster. For these reasons, it is declared, Russia will await the outcome of the different phases of the Bulgarian crisis with the greatest calmness and act in such a way as to avoid being involved with Austria or England at the moment when France and Germany commence hostilities.

Colorado Mining Case.

NEW YORK, February 19.—Welton C. Percy, as receiver of the Summit County Mining and Smelting Company, has no doubt from Judge Andrews in supreme court chambers an injunction restraining C. Robinson Girling from any interference with the mining property at Summit county, Colorado, either in the mining or working away of ore. The company was incorporated some years ago with Jerome B. Chaffee and J. Nelson Tappan among the trustees. It owned 2,000 acres of valuable land, including placer and other mines in the town of Breckenridge, Colo. Through certain conveyances Gregg claims to have possession of the land. The receiver appointed has obtained an injunction to protect stockholders.

Winter in Montana.

ANACONDA, Mont., February 19.—For a period extending over the last six weeks unprecedented snows, blizzards and gales of wind have raged through the northern and western portions of Montana. The oldest settlers acknowledge the winter is the most severe of any for the last ten years. The main range of the Rockies has along it on the least 15 drifts. Montana from two to six feet of snow, and there is an average depth of twenty inches upon the prairies. Drifts are found upon the cattle ranges in coulees and along the stage routes to a remarkable depth and the surface of the snow is covered with a crust too thick for the cattle to break in order that they may reach the grass. Stock of all kinds is suffering in a most fearful manner, and while some of the cattle men estimate the probable loss at 25 per cent, a majority claim to have quit flouring on losses now and will be thankful if they have enough left to start afresh in the spring. Hay is very scarce and high. Fifty dollars per ton is paid with alacrity. The various mail coach lines have been the greatest sufferers by impassable roads, delay of mails and mortality among their stock, the Helena and Benton stage company alone having lost fifty head of horses since Christmas. Should a sudden chinook set in now there would be a sudden break up of the Missouri river from Benton, causing tremendous gorges and an immense amount of destruction. The great and continued cold weather has caused in many places a serious fuel famine at the town of Fort Benton. The question of fuel is becoming most serious, especially to the poorer classes, who are unable to pay the exorbitant prices demanded.

Coast Defences.

WASHINGTON, February 18.—The house committee on military affairs to-day resumed consideration of the McAdoo bill, which appropriates twenty million for coast defences. Lieutenant General Sheridan was present by invitation. He said that he had heretofore refrained from expressing any expert opinion on the subject of coast defence, but in his view what the country needs at present is guns, and when they have been procured it will be proper to take up the question of fortification.

Dependent Pension Bill.

WASHINGTON, February 18.—The president's veto on the dependent relative pension bill was discussed by the house committee on invalid pensions to-day, but no formal vote on the matter was taken. A sub-committee is at work preparing a report recommending the passage of the bill over the veto, and it is expected that this report will be laid before the full committee to-morrow, and when the vote is taken the matter will be called up in the house.

Railroads and the New Law.

NEW YORK, February 18.—The trunk line executive committee and Central Traffic association at Commissioner Fink's office adopted the following resolutions:

WHEREAS, The executive committee of the trunk line commission and Central Traffic association and other members of the joint committee being convened in joint meeting for consideration of the bearings of the law regulating interstate freight and passenger traffic upon classification of traffic and methods of the joint committee, hereby adopt the following resolutions:

Resolved, That freights and classifications and passenger tariffs of the railways comprising the joint committee be at once examined and be revised in all respects in which they are found not to conform to the law.

Resolved, That a freight rate committee, a freight classification committee and a passenger committee be appointed by the chairman to conduct said revisions and that each of the said committees consider, formulate and recommend such amendments, rules and results thereto as may be found required to secure uniform application of the law on subjects referred to them respectively.

Resolved, That said committee report their recommendations as speedily and as fully as practicable to the joint committee, which shall then be promptly convened to consider and act upon the same.

It was stated also that the question of passes was considered, and that it was decided to recall them, and they will make no discrimination except in the case of ministers and missionaries. The system of pooling was incidentally touched upon, but nothing definite was done in the matter. The commission will meet again to-morrow.

The following roads were represented by one or more general officers: The Pennsylvania, Reading & Danville, Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis, Grand Trunk, New York & New England, Nickel Plate, Michigan Central, Northwestern, Erie, New York Central, West Shore, Boston & Albany, Baltimore & Ohio and a number of others. Commissioner Blanchard of the Central Traffic association and Commissioner Abbott of the Southern Passenger association were also present, making altogether an unusually large representation of the railroad interests of the country. Several roads had from two to four executive officers present.

Germany's Electoral Campaign.

BERLIN, February 18.—Prussian provincial governors have issued a circular advising officials of the unusual importance of the coming election for the reichstag, urging them to refrain from doing anything to assist the opponents of the government. The ministries of other German states have adopted a similar course.

The national liberal committee of Lubeck sent to Bismarck a copy of a placard posted on the walls of that city by progressists, quoting from a pretended manifesto of the emperor. The statement was that no war was impending. Bismarck immediately telegraphed a reply which was placarded throughout Lubeck, stating that the declaration of the emperor was an absolute invention.

The Post denounces the lying methods resorted to by progressists and centre members. The latter says those adhering to the triennate are especially assiduous in their efforts to reduce the importance of the pope's declaration in the eyes of Catholics. The conversion of Catholic movement is certain to triumph. The democratic party of the Rhenish nobility was the precursor of a general movement now spreading from the Rhine to the Oder, and from the Vistula to the Danube. Catholics being reunited by equal love for the emperor and the pope.

TEMPERANCE TRIUMPH.

Struggles of Our City's Founders Against the Saloons.

Lawlessness and Violence Opposed by Secret Organization.

Final Victory and Vindication of Law and Order.

The founders of Colorado Springs determined that it should be a temperance town. As a firm basis upon which to build such a settlement, a clause generally known as the liquor clause was inserted in every deed given, forever prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors upon the premises deeded. It was not expected that this prohibition would absolutely prevent the sale of liquor, but it was believed that it would be a powerful factor in enabling the Colorado Springs company and the town authorities to control the business so as to prevent its being carried on in an objectionable manner, in open saloons and noisy common places of resort. Owing largely to the clause in the deeds and to the efforts of the promoters of the town company, the first permanent settlers here, the parties who came and bought property and erected houses, were nearly all strong temperance advocates. The names of J. E. Ambrose, Dr. Bradbury, J. M. Colgate, Judge Geo. H. Stewart, J. E. Miller, Matt Fenner, N. Hodgman and C. T. Burton will occur as illustrative of this statement. Through the influence of such men such strong temperance town officers were elected to manage the affairs of the infant settlement which it was hoped would be able to stand alone. Hundreds of thousands of circulars and pamphlets were scattered broadcast over the country enumerating the many advantages of this place as a home, not the least of these being that it would always be a safe and pleasant place to live in owing to the absence of saloons and the disreputable places which invariably accompany them.

The early temperance settlers were not destined, however, to have things all their own way without a terrible struggle with desperate and unprincipled opponents. The business of a saloon keeper is always an easy and generally a profitable one, and before the town was much over a year old it was whispered that liquor was being surreptitiously sold in certain places. Like all other rapidly growing frontier towns a bad element had drifted in and this element furnished customers to the whiskey sellers and proprietors of gambling houses. The illegal traffic carried on in such a cautious manner, was not, however, profitable enough to satisfy those engaged in it, and late in 1873 D. A. Cowell commenced fitting up the building now occupied by Mr. Thomas Hughes, with the view of opening a saloon and conducting it without restraint or regard for law or public opinion. About the same time Rist & Reef opened up a gorgeously furnished saloon and billiard hall in the place now occupied by Messrs. Nichols & Lowe, and did a very large and profitable business. It may seem strange that these parties who owned the buildings occupied by them were willing to incur the risk of losing their property through the operation of the clause in their deeds. The fact is that they, in common with many others, had been led to believe that the clause was wholly illegal and inoperative, and would be so held by the courts. This view was strengthened by the opinions of nearly all the lawyers who came here to settle, or visit the place, and the liquor leagues ridiculed the deeds and advised the saloon keepers to contest the legality of the clause whenever an effort was made to enforce it. In the meantime half a dozen little grog shops opened up in the business portion of the town.

A few months after Cowell opened his saloon the Colorado Springs company commenced a suit of ejectment for the recovery of the property owned by him, determined to make it a test case. As the matter promised to be in the courts for some years, the city authorities moved with vigor against the liquor sellers for violations of the town ordinances. The result of these trials was usually discouraging. So strong was the liquor element here, and so unscrupulous were the liquor dealers, their customers and the lawyers who managed their cases, that it was practically impossible to get verdicts against the law breakers from the juries which were packed in their interests. During the winter of 1874 lawlessness was rampant in Colorado Springs. The streets were filled with drunken men who insulted with impunity the decent men and women who ventured out in the evenings. The city authorities acknowledged their inability to make headway against the tide of immorality that threatened the prosperity and further growth of the town.

* * * * * *

It was a dark cold night in January, 1874. The biting wind had cleared the streets of pedestrians. Legitimate business houses—the few that were then here—were closed, but the saloons were open, brilliantly illuminated, and packed with drunken men, the noise of whose orgies floated out upon the wintry air. A tall man wearing a slouch hat, and muffled up in a long scarf, walked quietly down Tejon street. He passed around the GAZETTE office and ascended the rear stairs of that building. A moment later a dim light was seen in the front room, second story. Within half an hour he was joined by a sufficient number of others to completely fill the little room. But little was said, but those present saw nothing but courage and determination in each other's eyes. A motion that Geo. H. Stewart take the chair was put and carried. A gentleman who had been active in organizing the meeting arose and said: Gentlemen—We are here to consider what shall be done to save the town in which we have made our homes, and in which we hoped to take great pride, from the condition of degradation of rum. Our judges are selected by the saloons, which are emptied into our courts of justice whenever a violator of the liquor law is presented for trial. Our witnesses are drawn from the saloons and the lawyers whom their money has retained. Our authorities need help. We must restore the city with our money, our votes and physical support. We need ten thousand dollars. This meeting must raise half of it before it adjourns."

Mr. J. K. Lee, the founder of this paper, said: "I will move when we adjourn the room, we will be ready to do our duty."

"We, the undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to pay to John Parker, treasurer, such proportion of ten thousand dollars as may be levied upon us for the purpose of organizing and maintaining the existing laws for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors in the town of Colorado Springs."

Over five thousand dollars were pledged in less than an hour. This subscription paper may well be considered the Declaration of Independence of sober power of Colorado Springs. The society was in a measure a secret one. Many other names were afterward added to the list. Each member pledged himself to attend every trial. An executive committee was appointed, and subcommittees selected on complaints, on evidence, on law and attorneys, on juries, on penalties, on funds, and on witnesses.

The saloon keepers learned of the formation of this society and were greatly alarmed. They had cause to be. Within forty-eight hours several arrests were made. On the day of the trial before Justice R. C. Leon the members of the new organization were early on the ground and filled the room. Mr. Davidson and Judge Miller of Denver represented the accused. Channing Sweet and W. A. Wilkes were present for the city and the new organization. In selecting a jury a number of the signers of the pledge were empanelled. A determined effort was made by Judge Miller to throw the case off. The justice promptly ruled that unless they had subscribed money for the purpose of prosecuting the particular defendants the men in dispute were competent jurors. The law prevailed. The parties were convicted. When the court adjourned the leading temperance men who had taken an active interest in the trial were surrounded by an infuriated mob of saloon retainers. Mr. Lee was the principal object of their rage, but calm and resolute he dodged them all. A short time after the first trial as Mr. Lee was going home at night to his home across the Monument, where Mrs. Farlay now lives, he was attacked by three men near the railroad bridge. Drawing his pistol he put the attacking party to flight, sending a bullet after them. About the same time Major McAllister was assaulted by two men near the stone school house on Cascade avenue and knocked down by a stone hurled at him. Not a day passed for some weeks without the arrest of some one for violating the liquor law, and so well planned were the prosecutions that conviction almost invariably followed. One after another the saloons closed. The proprietor of the fifth and last, in utter desperation at continued prosecution, sent a bullet into his own brain.

Various means were adopted to evade the law. At Cowell's saloon a wheel was put into a partition, by means of which the drinks called for could be placed before the customer while the party furnishing it could not be seen. Captain E. Boyd, Lecky's old Kansas frontiersman, who had served under old John Brown in many a desperate encounter, volunteered to spike the wheel. Taking a chisel and spike he entered the saloon one afternoon, when it was crowded with ranchmen, and coolly drove the spike through the wheel in such a way as to effectually stop it. With hatchet in hand, he quietly sat down to watch the result. Many a fist was shaken under his nose and many a threat made, but the assailants did not battle attack and at the end of some hours the captain walked out uninjured.

One of the last prosecutions was that of McDonald, barkeeper for Cowell. He had been convicted and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, but had appealed to the district court. The whiskey sellers had made his case a test one and felt quite confident that Judge Bell of Denver would declare the liquor ordinance invalid. They were greatly deceived. The judge decided every point against the liquor dealers. McD nald jumped the town, and Cowell's saloon—the last one in town—was finally and forever closed.

Railroad Settlement.

NEW YORK, February 19.—The suit of the Kansas and Texas income scrip holders against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad was settled to-day by agreement of the company to buy the scrip. The terms are 60 per cent in Kansas & Texas 5 per cent bonds and 40 per cent in Galveston, Harrisburg & Houston bonds for the face of the scrip, and $200,000 to be distributed among coupon holders as interest. By private arrangement Jay Gould agrees to buy $500,000 of Galveston, Harrisburg & Houston bonds at 83, making the scrip net above 90¾.

Burned in Their Home.

CLEVELAND, February 19.—A special from Wooster, Ohio, says: John Boughman, Sr., and wife, 85, a wealthy couple living in Dalton, this county, met with a horrible fate early this morning. The house was discovered to be on fire at 1 o'clock by neighbors who burst open the door and found the aged couple in an asphyxiated state. The man was dressed and dead. The wife still living, though not as yet resuscitated, and it is said cannot recover. The fire is supposed to have been caused by the explosion of a lamp.

OLD TOWN.

The Historic Centre of El Paso County.

Causes of Its Decline.—Its Recent Revival.

Colorado is a new country—that is, new in the sense that it has been but a few years since it has been extensively visited and its resources known to the people of the eastern states. To many people the word Colorado still conjures a vast region of mountain and plain, over which the Indian and wild animals still roam but little disturbed. We have known persons to come to this part of the state in recent years—and the occurrence is not uncommon—expecting to live the wild life of the frontier, and to live through some of the scenes they have seen pictured in the popular wild west shows or have read of in the exciting volumes of a dime novel. The truth is, they have come too late. There was a time when in the county of El Paso people had to make their way through such things, but that was many years ago, and the people who now live here at this day expecting it, seem to find that such things are gone forever, or, at least, have "gone west."

But if we who live here now cannot be "scalped" and cannot participate in the stirring scenes of a life on the frontier, we can at least enjoy the tales of adventure and romance which those who came first had to tell, we can live again with them the lives they led and almost feel an acquaintance with many of the typical characters who lived here.

The first permanent settlement in El Paso county was made at Colorado City, and that place has always been a perfect nucleus around which has centered most that is romantic and unique in the history of the county. It is our intention in this article to give a sketch of the settlement of that place and to convey to the reader a most small idea of the people who made it.

The first settlers in the county were a party of gold seekers in the summer of 1859 who sailed from Lawrence, Kan., the point at which most expeditions of that time outfitted before starting across the plains. The discovery of gold in Clear creek had caused the great Pike's Peak gold excitement, for this state, then a county of Kansas and called Arapahoe, was popularly known as "the Pike's Peak region" and it was natural that the mountain itself should receive some attention. This party came up the Arkansas valley, and after prospecting the foot hills from the river up, finally encamped on the creek which runs just east of the Garden of the Gods and flows through Glen Eyrie. This they named Camp creek and it still bears that name. They stayed there until driven out by high water when they took refuge in the cave in one of the large rocks at the gateway of the garden. It is said that the walls are still blackened from their camp fire, and that some of their names can be found as they traced them in the stone. They built out a town on the present site of Colorado Springs which they named El Paso, from the fact that it was situated just at the point where the Ute pass opens out on the plains—El Paso being Spanish and meaning "the pass." Shares in the town company which was to build El Paso into a flourishing city were sold in Lawrence and farther east, and we are told that long years after Colorado Springs had become an accomplished fact parties came here to investigate their claims to property through the El Paso Town Company shares. These people failed to find the gold they sought and in a few months became disenchanted and removed to a point some five miles above the present site of Denver.

The next attempt to form a settlement was made at Colorado City by a party hailing from Kansas City. They first went to the settlement above Denver that the previous party had just formed, but decided to come on to this point. The story is very graphically told of how they started in the middle of January in a snow storm, and during the ascent of the north side of the Divide waded through snow three feet deep, but arriving at the top and gazing down into the valley on the southern side they saw that there was no snow and the sun was shining bright and warm. They hurried forward, their hearts bounding with joy, for they beheld a promised land as far as Moses viewed from the heights of Pisgah.

They laid out a town on the present site of Colorado City, which they named El Dorado. Some of the first party that had arrived had taken up ranches along the Fountain on the site of the new town, and hearing what had been done they returned to claim their property. There was considerable trouble for a while, but matters were finally adjusted and the parties settled down peaceably together.

In view of the fact that last Monday the Midland railroad crossed the long bridge over the Roxton cañon and ever since has been laying rails up the Ute pass at the rate of a mile a day, the history of the first attempt to enter the pass may be interesting. The El Doradans sent out as their representatives to search for the much longed for gold fields, Mr. George A. Bate, a man by the name of Tucker and four others. They followed the Indian trail up the pass and got as far as the petrified stumps, but their stock of provisions gave out and they had to return to the settlement. But they had discovered that it was possible to enter the mountains other than on foot, and so they loaded up a wagon and with an ox team succeeded in reaching the South park. They were repaid for their trouble by discovering gold in the Platte river.

The discovery of gold in this portion of the mountains soon reached the northern part of the territory, and a good many people arrived and went into the park through the pass. But, as the winter proved to be a long, hard one, they were unable to wash the gold out

Manager and Editor.

We begin to publish this morning a series of letters from Old Mexico by our special correspondent.

The meeting of the railroad officials yesterday shows a serious intention to carry out the provisions of the interstate commerce bill. This will put the railroads in a good position to ask for any reasonable modification of the bill in the next congress.

The two articles giving reminiscences of our early history will be read with interest. Those who have remain in the last days are can hardly realize the struggle there was in 1873 and 1874 to drive out the saloons. The effort was successful and much of the prosperity and beauty of the city is owing to this. Those who remember the city in the days of the Leadville boom, know that we should have had all the vices of a frontier town with open saloons. We should have had an entirely different population and a different class of improvements. We owe a great debt of gratitude to those men who made such an earnest and successful fight to suppress the saloon.

Mr. Albert Routliff with Frederick Keppel & Co. of New York, will have an exhibition on Monday at the Consolidated Book Store of a large collection of etchings and engravings. This is a splendid opportunity to obtain fine prints. There is not so large a stock outside of New York as Mr. Routliff carries with him in his annual visits to Colorado. Keppel & Co. are the largest dealers in engravings in the country. They sold, through their agent who comes here, nearly all the prints in the famous Morgan collection which was disposed of a year ago. We advise our readers to examine this collection as there is seldom an opportunity afforded here to see such fine pictures.

The prohibitionists in the east seem to be bringing their cause into general contempt. Lake Mohonk, a peculiarly peculiar place, has now that will do most to [illegible] two new appearances on an admittedly opposed and [illegible] interest. The prohibitionists [illegible] Because they can't have prohibition, have united with the liquor dealers. The prohibitionists and liquor dealers are now working hand in hand. If prohibition can be forced it is undoubtedly the best means of preventing intemperance. But in community like New York city where public sentiment is not strong for prohibition, it could not be enforced. The thing to do is to educate the prohibitionists to do this—to make moderate men who sincerely wish to decrease intemperance. The [illegible] unfriendly. But nothing better is offered as no law is better than an unenforced law. In Vermont there were 404 liquor dealers who paid United States taxes in 1880. In New Hampshire there were [illegible]. Yet these are both prohibition states. There is a common sense form for all good people. All admit liquor drinking is the worst evil of the present day, and all will take hold to control and reduce it. If we can't suppress it it is better to do the best we can.

cessfully on account of the large boulders in the stream. Then there came reports of richer "finds" at the Gregory diggings, and the poor miners became discouraged and with one consent "got up and got," and El Dorado City was entirely abandoned.

But though El Dorado City came to naught there was soon to rise from its ashes, Phœnix-like, a city of more more pretensions and one that came to stay. The Ute pass was then regarded as the only practicable route into the mountains, and a number of persons residing at Auraria (West Denver) decided that it might be a good speculation to found a town at the entrance to the pass. So in August, 1859, a company was formed for this purpose, prominent among who m were Lewis Tappan, Anthony Bott, George A. Hale, Richard Whitsitt, S. W. Wagoner, the second probate judge of the territory, and Albert N. Richardson, the famous author of "Beyond the Mississippi."

This company formed itself into an association called the "El Paso Claim Club," which performed the functions of a land office. Such as the registration of claims and settlement of all disputes regarding land. The company claimed twelve hundred and eighty acres of land for the site of their town, which they named Colorado City. Colonel Sellers in his wildest dreams of making a metropolitan city out of Stone's Landing never had higher hopes or expected more than did the founders of Colorado City. The following are a few ex cerpts from a long letter written by Professor Goldrick to the Missouri Democrat—now the St. Louis Globe-Democrat—published in the issue of Tuesday morning, March 29, 1859. The letter is dated "Colorado City, Foot of Pike's Peak, El Paso county, Jefferson Territory, March 1, 1859."

COLORADO CITY A GREAT PROMINENT POINT

"This is destined to be second to no other city in the great territory of Jefferson. Good city property here I consider as valuable almost as in Denver City—corner lots here on Broadway street are worth from $500 to $2000. It is situated at the great natural opening or 'Yute' pass from the plains to the parks, and all other points of the gold regions west in Utah. The new from road lately completed to the Park, Blue and Snowy range diggings is the choicest, the finest, the most level and the best constructed for horse, carriage or heavy wagon travel that there is in the country. * * * The beautiful Fountaine qui Bouille river runs from the side of the great peak, three or five miles beyond, down through the city and affords all the facilities for water power, and is the best and coolest water for city use, possibly, being cool enough in summer without any ice whatever. The city contains some twelve hundred acres, and is increasing as rapidly as any city in the west. * * * There are now some two hundred and forty fine, handsome looking houses erected, and hundreds more in progress and contemplation. Some very large three-story stone houses and some very handsome gothic offices and dwellings are completing.

"The beautiful red rock quarries and cliffs, within a mile of the city, and also the ridges of beautiful white and brown sandstone, and limestone quarries surrounding, will furnish the greatest and cheapest opportunities for putting up the finest stores and warehouses, and the handsomest residences this side of Fifth avenue, New York city. * * * The main streets or avenues are very finely laid out, extending over a mile east and west, Colorado avenue and Washington avenue, being, as yet, the most noted and most thickly built upon. The lay and the lots of these avenues at once suggest a metropolitan comparison, and an admirable adaptation for street railroads, and such other civilization as is obtained in the far east. Several stores, saloons, livery stables, etc., are established here. A large Catholic church or rathedral is contemplated by parties from your city, we believe. Also Methodist and Congregational churches, school houses, theatre and concert halls.

Thus began the actual life of Colorado City and it seemed for a while that the expectations of its founders might in a measure at least be realized for the time of the Tarryall diggings or the Grand diggings, as they were called, spread far and wide and the strands of people flocked into the parks and mountains and Colorado City was the headquarters for all supplies. During the winter of '59-'60 there were upward of a hundred log cabins erected, and during the year 1860 the town perhaps reached the highest point of prosperity. But when the war broke out there was so much fighting along the eastern line of the route that travel was diverted from the Arkansas valley. Then it was discovered to be practicable to get into the South park mines from Denver with teams without taking the roundabout way of the Ute pass, and for the good reason that there was nothing to do to keep the many people busy who had flocked into the place, its "boom" which had started out with such a foolish flickered and all but died out. The most of the people left, and the log houses which they had occupied were either moved out into ranches or cut up into fire wood. The glory of the place had departed and for more than twenty years it has slumbered in a Rip Van Winkle-like sleep, not in the least disturbed by the bustle of its sister cities in the county which have grown up beside it. But there have been those who have clung to the place, and hoped and prayed, when hope and prayer almost seemed a mockery, that some good magician would some day touch it with his magic wand and arouse it into life. And this faith seems likely to soon have its reward, for if the business activity evinced by Colorado City since the new railroad began building is continued, the big sisters who have grown up and who in the insolence of their pride nicknamed her "Old Town," will have to bestir themselves or she will yet lead them all.

In 1861 an act was passed organizing the territory of Colorado, and forming it out of parts of Kansas and Nebraska. The first legislature met in Denver and decided to locate the capital at Colorado City. In 1862 the legislature met there, but by an unfortunate division among the members from the southern part of the territory, while the members from the northern part voted together, it was decided to move the capital to Denver.

Perhaps the crowning feature of Colorado City in the days of her prosperity was its newspaper. It was called the "Colorado City Journal," and was a weekly, six-column paper, printed at home, and its editor was no less a person than Hon. Benjamin F. Crowell, so well known to most of the readers of the GAZETTE. The paper was run for about a year, and, like most such institutions "established to fill a long felt want," failed to pay for itself.

We have seen how the old town started, why it failed ever came into existence at all; we have seen the causes which led to its early decline, and now perhaps one of the many stories which the old-timers love to tell of early days may serve to illustrate not only the character of the people, but the many strange scenes in which they were often called to enact a part.

There had been a good deal of horse stealing going on throughout the country, and it was resolved that the first horse thief caught should be made an example of. So a trap was set in the suburbs to nab by picketing a horse and putting a sentry in the house near by, but the man fell asleep and a Mexican came along and got the animal. But just as the fellow got the horse the owner, who was not far away, awoke and rushed out and captured both him and the horse. The poor Mexican was taken to an empty house in the town, a rope was put around his neck and he was drawn up so that he stood on his tiptoes and there he was left until morning. The next day, which was set for his trial, was Sunday, and the morning broke bright and beautiful. While the story of the trial and execution are rather laughable, it was a most serious affair at the time—especially to the Mexican—and a most solemn one to all present. A crowd of perhaps three hundred had collected. A judge was selected and he chose two associate justices, a sheriff was appointed and empaneled to represent both the prisoner and the people selected, and the crowd was to be the jury. The evidence was sifted thoroughly. The Mexican—who was a pretty sharp fellow—trumped up a lot of evidence to show previous good character, etc., but it was evident from the first that he would be convicted.

After the evidence was all in the chief justice arose and announced that all those who believed the prisoner guilty might take the right hand side of the street and all of a contrary opinion should take the left, and that if a verdict for conviction was found the sentence would be death. A couple of fellows who had stayed all through the trial started off down the street, but the judge drew his revolver and exclaimed: "Stop! Every one who has heard this trial must vote and take his share of the responsibility, and I will shoot the first one that refuses." The two men came back and walked over to the side of the road which indicated death, and were immediately followed by the entire three hundred.

Now religious privileges were very rare in those days and the people when they had a chance were usually very attentive, and it happened that the Rev. William Howbert, a Methodist minister, and the father of ex Senator Howbert of this city, was coming along. Seeing the crowd collected he stopped to inquire what the trouble was and learning the cause he requested that the execution be postponed as he would like to preach a sermon to them before they did anything that they might regret. They replied that they would be dashed if they would, they had this business on hand and intended to carry it out, but that if he would wait with his sermon they would all return and listen later.

The prisoner was taken to the Red cañon, just south of the town, a board was nailed to a tree and a grave dug. Then the victim was placed on the board with one end of a lariat—borrowed from one of the ranchmen present—around his neck and the other around the limb of a tree. The sheriff got up to make a speech to the people and he no doubt intended to say something grand and impressive that would be fitting the solemn occasion, so he commenced: "Ladies and gentlemen!"—there was not a woman within a hundred miles. After this eloquent burst words failed him and to hide his confusion he kicked the board loose and the poor Mexican was launched into eternity. After he was pronounced dead one of the men reached up to cut the lariat but the ranchman who owned it cried out, "Hold on, that's mine and I don't want it cut."

Mexicans were cheap enough but a rope was a rope in those days. The Mexican was placed in his grave, which was a little too short and had to be scooped out of the gravel so that it looked something like a well, the people returned very quietly to town and wended their way to the church where they listened to the good man discourse of peace, love and forgiveness.

Like in most new settlements on the frontier, there were several executions for horse-stealing. While we are not prepared to defend "Judge Lynch" or executions of this class for any cause whatever, still we can easily see how on the frontier horse stealing could become even a greater crime than an actual attack on a man's life. A traveler out on the prairie, miles from any settlement, who has his horse stolen is attacked by an enemy from which he cannot defend himself. He is left at the mercy of every foe, both human and beast, and perhaps starvation, and those, who know the horror of being left thus and will condemn a fellow mortal to such a fate, are hardly worthy to live.

They were a sturdy race, these hardy pioneers, as it was necessary they should be; and they builded, too, better than they knew. Perhaps the motive of most of them in coming here was not the disinterested one of opening up a path to civilization, and perhaps some of them had less nobler reasons than that of gain, but they had bold hearts and physical courage and that we can all admire.

Colorado Legislature.

DENVER, February 19.—Several bills were read in the house today and referred:

S. B. 43, by Kinkaid, entitled conveyances, received its third reading and final passage, Mr. Griswold only voting negatively.

H. B. 153, by Crawford, protection to game, received its third reading and final passage, Messrs. Griswold, Belsinger and Hicks voting negatively.

H. B. 175, by Sutherland, condemnation of lands, etc., in cities of the first and second class, received its third reading and final passage, the vote being unanimous.

The remainder of the day in the house was occupied in the discussion of bills on second reading.

Business in the senate to-day was simply routine and nothing of importance was transacted.

Fire Among Cotton Bales.

NEW YORK, February 19.—The fire at the American cotton docks at Tompkinsville, Staten Island, which was caused by lightning, and which broke out early last evening, is still burning briskly, although fully under control of the firemen. Shortly after one this morning the fire spread to the adjoining warehouse, No. 61, which was entirely destroyed, together with contents. No. 11 tumbled over. Two employes, Thos. Garrigan and James Conroy, who were on the wall of the building, were buried beneath the ruins. Only the latter extricated both were found to be seriously injured. Two thousand bales of cotton has been destroyed. The loss on buildings and cotton will reach over $200,000, which is fully covered by insurance.

Eastern Weather.

NEW YORK, February 19.—A severe rain storm prevailed here to-day, increasing in severity toward night. At 5 o'clock this evening it was accompanied by heavy peals of thunder and vivid flashes of lightning. One of the bolts struck a large four story building on the American cotton docks at Tompkinsville, Staten Island, setting fire to a number of cotton bales on the top floor. The burning buildings contained about 10,000 bales of cotton. The loss is estimated at $350,000, which is fully covered by insurance.

LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY.

Some Memorable Words of the Patriot Recalled

By a Dinner Given to Commemorate his Birthday.

Later Judgment on Lincoln's Services and Addresses.

A week ago last night the new republican club of New York gave a public dinner in memory of Lincoln's birthday. Senator J. R. Hawley replied to the toast in the memory of Lincoln. The most effective part of his eloquent address was that in which he quoted many of the sayings of Lincoln. These quotations suggest the making of others which, if familiar to some of our readers, will be read again with interest and, if not familiar to others, will be read with pleasure and profit. There is no difference of opinion now in the estimate of the man and his services. Nor is there any question now concerning the quality and value of his public utterances. In war time Phillips, Sumner and Everett were considered our greatest orators. But, as years have gone by, the general estimate of his contemporaries has placed the war addresses and speeches of Lincoln far above them all for their adequate judgment, touching pathos, beautiful, fit constitutional diction and moral elevation. It was given to two men, in Lincoln's life, to understand and appreciate him as we do now. One was our seer and the other our greatest critic. The judgment of the former in his remarks at the funeral services held in Concord in April, 1865, and of the latter in his article of the North American Review favoring the re-election of Lincoln in 1864, are not the least evidence of the right of Emerson to be regarded as the clearest discerner of truth, and Lowell as the best balanced and most discriminating critic of our day. Emerson in his address said:

"I am sure if this man had ruled in a period of less facility of printing, he would have become mythological in a very few years, like Kemp or Pilpay or one of the Seven Wise Masters, by his fables and proverbs. But the weight and penetration of many passages in his letters, messages and speeches, let him now by the very closeness of their application to the moment are destined hereafter to wide fame. What present difficulties, what unerring common sense, what foresight and on great occasion what lofty, and more than national, humane tone! His brief speech at Gettysburg will not easily be surpassed by words on any recorded occasion. This, and one other American speech, that of John Brown to the court that tried him, and a part of Kossuth's speech at Birmingham, can only be compared with each other, and with no fourth."

Mr. Lowell in the article we have mentioned above gives the most elaborate and just estimate of Lincoln yet written. A single quotation cannot do justice to his views. But we give a short portion of his concluding paragraph:

"Mr. Lincoln has never studied Quinctilian; but he has in the earnest simplicity and unaffected Amerikanism of his own character, one art of oratory worth all the rest. * * * * Homely, dispassionate, showing all the roughhewed process of his thought as it goes along, yet arriving at his conclusions with an honest kind of every-day logic, he is so eminently our representative man, that, when he speaks, it seems as if the people were listening to their own thinking aloud. The dignity of his thought owes nothing to ceremonial garb of words, but to the manly movement that comes of settled purpose and an energy of reason that knows not what rhetoric means."

His first great speech that gave him a national reputation was delivered before the republican state convention of Illinois in 1858, when he was nominated to run against Douglas for the United States senate. This speech contained the famous sentence, "I believe this government cannot endure permanently, half slave and half free"; also his stating "equate ter sovereignty" or "sacred right of self government" as amounting to this, "that if any man chooses to enslave another, no third man shall be allowed to object." This speech has one of the best specimens of his homely convincing logic in his review of the Kansas Nebraska bill and the Dred Scott decision, but the argument is too long to quote here.

His first inaugural address of 1861 is one of his most conservative utterances, in which he so clearly outlines a policy of peace that no state that wished to remain in the union could have any excuse for going out. Read in the light of the passions already stirred, and the acts of secession already passed, it is phen menal for its sober, quiet, honest appeal for union. It closes with these memorable words:

My countrymen, one and all, think calmly and well upon this whole subject. Nothing valuable can be lost by taking time. If there be any object to hurry any of you in hot haste to a step which you would never take deliberately that object will be frustrated by taking time; but no good object can be frustrated by it. Such of you as are now dissatisfied still have the old constitution unimpaired, and on the sensitive point, the laws of your own framing under it; while the new administration will have no immediate power, if it would, to change either. If it were admitted that you who are dissatisfied hold the right side in this dispute there is still no single good reason for precipitate action. Intelligence, patriotism, Christianity, and a firm reliance on Him who has never yet forsaken this favored land are still competent to adjust in the best way all our present difficulty. In your hands, my fellow countrymen, and not in mine, are the momentous issues of civil war. The government will not assail you. You can have no conflict without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the government, while I shall have the most solemn one to "preserve, protect and defend" it.

I am loth to close. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break, our bonds of affection. The mystic cords of memory, stretching from every battle field and patriot grave to every living heart and hearth-stone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the union when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature.

On the 19th of November, 1863, there was the dedication of a monument to the memory of the dead at Gettysburg. Edward Everett delivered a finished oration and Lincoln followed with a few remarks. When Lincoln closed, Everett stepped up to him and said "Prophetically you will be remembered as the orator of this occasion." The saying of Emerson above that it could be compared to two others but to no third will be remembered. The speech was as follows:

Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

The second inaugural address on March 4th, 1865, was his best state document of his presidency. Hardly a line or word in it but contained a gem of eloquence. The two closing paragraphs were as follows:

Neither party expected for the war the magnitude or the duration which it has already attained. Neither anticipated that the cause of conflict might cease when, or even before, the conflict itself should cease. Each looked for an easier triumph, and a result less fundamental and astonishing. Both read the same Bible and pray to the same God, and each invokes His aid against the other. It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask a just God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces, but let us judge not, that we be not judged. The prayer of both could not be answered. That of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has His own purposes. Woe unto the world because of offenses, for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom the offense comes. If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of those offenses which, in the providence of God, must needs come, but which having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove, and that He gives to both North and South this terrible war as the woe due to those by whom the offense came, shall we discern therein any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a living God always ascribe to Him? Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondsman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said, that the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.

With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphans, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.

Had we room, we should have given more of these addresses. But they are enough to illustrate what has been said in the beginning of this article.

VISITING TRADESMEN.

Yesterday morning a little before 12 o'clock a special train having on board the Santa Fe board of trade excursion arrived at the depot in this city. The train followed right behind the Salt Lake express which was an hour late caused by the work of placing the wrecked engine on the track two miles above the depot. The excursion train was in charge of Mr. Charles S. Lee of the general passenger agent's office at Denver and Conductor O'Shea.

The visitors were met at the depot by First Vice-President of the Colorado Springs Board of Trade Reuben Berry, Acting Mayor J. W. Stillman, Aldermen W. F. Wilder and Messrs. A. L. Lawton, M. Kennedy, T. A. McMorris, D. C. Dudley, B. F. Taylor and others. Carriages were in waiting for the visitors and they were at once driven around the city. All expressed themselves as being greatly pleased with the handsome private residences and the appearance of the business portion of the city. They were particularly pleased with the broad streets and the public buildings and improvements.

After their drive the party repaired to The Antlers where dinner was served through the hospitality of the local board. The menu was up to the usual standard of those furnished by Messrs. Monroe & Kittredge to their guests and was as follows:

New York oysters.
Consommé, Marguerite
Mock turtle, au quenelles.
Boiled salmon trout, sauce Hollandaise.
Potatoes au naturel.
Roast turkey, cranberry sauce.
Mashed potatoes.
Tenderloin of beef.
Chicken patties, à la Reine.
Gauntlet, cream sauce.
Roast rib of beef.
Boiled potatoes. Boiled rice.
Roast quarter of lamb.
Celery. Olives.
English plum pudding, hard and brandy sauce.
Vanilla custard pie. Assorted cake.
Ice cream and lemon ice.
Edam and cream cheese. Bent's crackers.
Nuts. Figs. Raisins.
Tea. Coffee.

In addition to this bill of fare each table was supplied with Manitou water, which the guests greatly enjoyed.

Before the party left the dining room President E. L. Bartlett of the Santa Fe board called the company to order and in a few well chosen words proposed a toast to the health, wealth and future prosperity of the Colorado Springs board of trade, which sentiment was heartily applauded. Mr. A. L. Lawton in a few words replied on behalf of the board, and also Mr. Berry, who expressed the pleasure which the local organization had in extending the hospitality of the day. Mr. Bartlett next introduced Mr. Arthur Boyle of Santa Fe, who gave expression to the feeling of pleasure which the party had experienced throughout their visit. He stated that he voiced the general wish that the interests of Santa Fe, Pueblo, Denver and Colorado Springs might be more closely allied. He congratulated the company on the fact that nearly every one present was interested or had been engaged in the building up of the new west. He closed by a pleasant reference to the hospitable manner in which they had been entertained by the Colorado Springs board. Alderman W. F. Wilder, in behalf of the city, welcomed the party and uttered the hope that the present visit might result very profitably to all concerned.

This finished the speech making and after an hour spent in social intercourse the company proceeded to the depot and left on their homeward journey at three o'clock. General regret was manifested over the disagreeable weather, as the mountains were entirely hidden from view by the clouds and the air was quite raw and chilly. The party all expressed themselves in the highest terms in regard to the pleasant reception which had been accorded them by the organization of this city.

The following is a complete list of the members of the party as taken from the Denver News, all of whom were in this city yesterday. The members are all of Santa Fe except when otherwise stated and the respective branches of business in which they are engaged is also given:

The Hon. Solomon Spiegelberg, the pioneer merchant of Santa Fe, having been a resident there in '57.

C. M. Creamer, wholesale and retail drugs.

NEW Congress.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, February 19.—The presiding officer presented several petitions from Posts of the Grand Army of the Republic for the passage of the invalid pension bill over the president's veto. Laid on the table.

Beck said that for years he had been presenting petitions for repeal of the navigation laws, in the hope that Americans might be able to own steam-ship lines on the ocean. He had now prepared a memorial on the same subject, signed by himself, and which he asked to have referred to the committee on commerce, before which committee he would be asked to be heard. As a basis to show the importance of the matter he had also referred with his memorial to an extract from a late speech of Count von Moltke of the German reichstag to show that war is inevitable; also a newspaper extract in regard to the action of England to aid her steam-ship lines. Referred to the committee on commerce.

A resolution offered by Gill for a meeting of the senate at 11 a. m. and adjournment at 9 p. m. (with an hour's recess) was taken up and referred to the committee on appropriations, Beck stating that business would be much more facilitated by giving the committee the time up to noon. He also stated that the committee on appropriations had now before it the legislative bill, the naval bill, the deficiency bill and other minor appropriations, and that the finance committee had before it half a dozen important matters, and that an extension of hours in the morning was simply calling off committee work.

In the senate, Jones, of the conference committee on the bill to refund trade dollars made a report and stated the points of it.

After a lengthy debate the report was agreed to—yeas 49, nays 5. The nays were: Frye, George, Jones of Arkansas, Morrill and Sherman.

The bill now goes to the president.

Adjourned.

HOUSE.

Matson of Indiana, from the committee of invalid pensions, reported the invalid pension bill with the president's veto message thereon. He asked that the report be printed in the Record and gave notice that he would call the bill up for action Thursday next.

Breckenridge of Arkansas objected to the report being printed in the Record, and thereupon Burrows of Michigan demanded that it be read.

The speaker decided that the report must be read, and the clerk proceeded to read it.

Breckenridge then rose to withdraw his objection, and was met with loud cries for "Regular order" from the republican side. Breckenridge finally was heard to withdraw his objection, but it was immediately renewed upon the republican side, and the reading was continued.

In the house the speaker announced the appointment of Hemphill of South Carolina as a conferee on the trade dollar bill in place of Scott of Pennsylvania, who is absent from the city.

Baker of New York called up as a privileged matter the resolution offered by him yesterday, fixing a day for consideration of the territorial admission bills, and under the operation of the rules it was referred to the committee on rules.

Lanham of Texas presented a conference report upon the trade dollar bill and it was agreed to without debate or division.

The house then went into committee of the whole for consideration of senate amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

On motion of McComas of Maryland the senate amendment was concurred in appropriating $25,000 for education of children in Alaska.

Hatterworth of Ohio moved to concur in the senate amendment directing the secretary of war to make inquiry as to the number of unknown soldiers buried in the various cemeteries with confederates, and whether their resting places are properly fenced and maintained.

On motion of Randall the senate amendment was concurred in for the purpose of enabling the committee of conference to frame the measure in accordance with the views of both sides of the house.

Pending further action on the senate amendments the committee rose and the house adjourned.

A Peace Officer on a Tear.

PHILADELPHIA, February 19.—Officer John McIntyre, 21st district, came to the station house this afternoon, mad with drink. On entering the hall from the rear door he drew his revolver and, before any one could get near him, he fired a pistol at a man at the prisoners' dock. There was a general scurry for the doors, and in a few seconds he was left in full possession. Lieut. Lynch, who was in his private office at the time, heard the noise, and accompanied by the clerks of the district, who had made the hurried exit, attempted to enter the hall from adjoining rooms. Directly he opened the door, however, McIntyre recommenced firing and the lieutenant was forced to retire. Then finding it would be impossible to reach him without first making him powerless, Lieutenant Lynch took his own revolver and suddenly opened the door wide enough to admit of his reaching out and brought the madman down with a shot. A patrol was immediately summoned, when it was found that McIntyre was dangerously wounded, and he was taken to the German hospital. It is thought that he is seriously wounded.

Heating Cars by Steam.

MILWAUKEE, February 18.—The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad company have equipped two passenger trains between Chicago and Milwaukee with apparatus for heating by steam from the locomotives. The equipment has so far proved successful, but it has not yet had the test of severe weather. The company is also building an iron smoking car to carry a boiler for generating steam for heating the train and to run next to the engine.

Hon. William B. Hayford of Bangor, Maine, a brother of Mrs. George N. Marden of this city, died very suddenly in that city on the 8th inst. He was a man of extensive business ability and at the time of his death was associated with ex-Vice President Hannibal Hamlin in some of the transactions of the Maine Central railway. He was also president of the Green Mountain railway and of the Bangor City Savings bank. The Bangor Weekly Commercial in speaking of his death says: "He was prompt in making of his decisions, prompt in all matters requiring attention, shrewd and sagacious and added to all his kindness of heart the world's dear delight, deeply and widely felt and this will not be by near quickly healed."

Wool Market.

The Chicago Wool Journal in its issue of the 15th inst. contains the following statement of the condition of the Chicago wool market up to that date:

The receipts for the past week have been 3,[illegible] lbs, against 1,858,[illegible] lbs for the previous week and 3,[illegible] lbs for the corresponding week of last year. The shipments have been 817,[illegible] lbs against 645,[illegible] lbs for the previous week and 20[illegible] for the corresponding week of last year.

The receipts since January 1st have been 8,[illegible] lbs against 1,[illegible] lbs at the corresponding date of 1886. The shipments for corresponding time were 1,857,[illegible] lbs against 1,[illegible] lbs.

We have had a dull market with less doing than for the two previous weeks. Buyers have still been disposed to demand the same concessions in prices which they secured last week, but sellers have been firmer and have held more steadily to the prices ruling a month ago.

OH! SAY!

First Party—"Have you seen Geo. Cant & Co's Wall Paper this year?"

Second Party—"Yes, and I would not have any other than theirs for they look so pretty on the walls as is seen by the elegant rooms of the Cliff House, Manitou, and the Grand View Hotel of this city."

First Party—"Well I have concluded to buy mine from them for heretofore I have always been disappointed in Paper in the roll and the same paper on the wall."
